IN DEFENSE OF FOOTNOTES <sup>1</sup> ..... Herma Hill Kay	419
1. In remarks first addressed to the 1990 Arizona Law Review banquet, Professor Hill defends one of the hallmarks of legal writing.
Articles
WORK AND FAMILY: RESTRUCTURING THE WORKPLACE..... Nancy E. Dowd	431
A critical workplace issue is the serious conflict between work and family responsibilities. This article argues that nothing less than a major restructuring of the workplace is necessary to deal with that conflict. Essential to that restructuring is the way we think about work and family, as well as the parameters of a restructured workplace. The article sets out an analytical framework for thinking about work and family, and a beginning vision of a restructured workplace.
CLIENT-CENTERED COUNSELING: REAPPRAISAL AND REFINEMENT ..... Robert D. Dinerstein	501
This article analyzes and re-examines the numerous arguments for and against client-centered legal counseling. The author responds to criticisms of the concept that have emanated from both traditional and Critical Legal Studies perspectives, as well as from client-centeredness advocates themselves. He concludes that a client-centered counseling model can be justified in a number of circumstances so long as important contextual factors are considered. In the final part of the article, the author proposes a variation of the most popular client-centered counseling model that enhances the model's ability to facilitate client decisionmaking.
BUILDING A BETTER MOUSETRAP: RECONSTRUCTING FEDERAL ENTRAPMENT THEORY FROM SORRELS TO MATHEWS ..... Laura Gardner Webster	605
This article examines the development of entrapment in the United States Supreme Court. The article traces the Court's retreat from a judicially administered entrapment rule in favor of a jury determination in Mathews v. United States . It suggests alternatives for theoretical growth and restored judicial control of court room process.
