

Bart Starr was a legendary American football quarterback best known for his time with the Green Bay Packers during the 1950s and 1960s. Born in Montgomery, Alabama in 1934, Starr played college football at the University of Alabama before being selected by the Packers in the 17th round of the 1956 NFL Draft. Though initially considered a long shot to make the team, he developed into one of the most successful quarterbacks in NFL history under the guidance of iconic coach Vince Lombardi.

Starr is most celebrated for leading the Packers to five NFL championships, including victories in the first two Super Bowls (Super Bowl I and II), where he was named MVP both times. Known for his calm demeanor, intelligence, and precise passing, Starr was a key figure in the Packers' dynasty era. One of his most famous plays came in the 1967 NFL Championship Game—often called the "Ice Bowl"—when he executed a quarterback sneak to score the game-winning touchdown against the Dallas Cowboys.

Beyond his playing career, Starr also served as the Packers' head coach from 1975 to 1983, though he found less success in that role. He remained a beloved figure in the Packers community and the broader football world, known for his humility, leadership, and sportsmanship. Starr was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1977, and his legacy endures as one of the NFL's all-time greats, both on and off the field.
