

Marti Lindsey and Cherokee storyteller, Writingbear, lead an environmental health workshop for high school students. // Courtesy photo

INDIGENOUS LEADERSHIP

8 LET'S TALK ABOUT WATER

Selso Villegas, Tohono O'odham environmental professional, is creating positive change in his community and Jordan Jimmie discuss how they hope to use their education in environmental science and research to benefit their communities

FEATURE

10 UA PROGRAM ENGINEERS RESEARCH PROJECTS FOR NATIVE AMERICAN STUDENTS

Participants study areas of environmental science including weather and climate, water quality, and aquaponics

PATHWAYS

12 MEET THE NEXT GENERATION OF INDIGENOUS LEADERS

In this issue, Seafha Ramos

CONTEST

17 SEE THE WINNING SUBMISSIONS!

Our first annual student literature and photography contests focused on environmental issues faced by Indigenous communities

ART

23 LYRICAL UPRISING

Frank Waln uses his music to bring awareness to environmental issues like the Keystone XL pipeline

"Pay attention to what's going on at home. Stay connected to your community." -Frank Waln
// Photo courtesy: Frank Waln

STUDENT RESOURCES

26 UA STUDENT PROGRAMS

Information regarding eligibility requirements and deadlines for various UA-affiliated organizations

SPOTLIGHT

27 THE BRIGHTEST STAR

Kelly Redshirt hopes to use her solar oven prototypes to help Navajo families without electricity