

PREFACE

I am very pleased to present the seventh issue of the Arizona Working Papers in Second Language Acquisition and Teaching (SLAT). The papers in this collection have been solicited, selected, and edited by graduate students in the SLAT Interdisciplinary Ph.D. program at the University of Arizona. I would like to commend Wendy Ashby and Julian Heather for their hard work and high standards in editing this volume. The authors are SLAT graduate students, alumni and faculty. Several are collaborative efforts between students and between faculty and students, which is consistent with our philosophy that graduate students are junior colleagues.

This issue, like previous issues of the Arizona Working Papers in SLAT, attempts to reflect the four curricular specialty areas in the SLAT Program. They are: 1) L2 Analysis, 2) L2 Use, 3) L2 Processes, and 4) L2 Pedagogical Theory and Program Administration. Two papers cross these boundaries and so are included in an Interdisciplinary Section.

As the name implies, these are works in progress. In most cases, the authors plan to revise their contributions and submit them for publication elsewhere. This volume is intended as a space for scholarly exchange, thus any questions, comments, and suggestions would be appreciated during the process of revision. Comments should be addressed to the individual authors.

SLAT is an interdisciplinary program based on the conviction that an understanding of the processes and practices of second language acquisition and teaching involves consideration of the interrelationships of language, learner (cognitive, affective and social), and instructional variables, and on the belief that research into these processes and practices, as well as the professional development of new scholars, can be best implemented in a structure which minimizes disciplinary boundaries. The papers appearing in this volume reflect that philosophy.

A brief description of the SLAT Program with a list of current faculty members is included at the end of the publication. Additional information is available from the Program office.
